COLIN NO LONGER A TROPICAL STORM IN FLA

The storm Colin dissipated off coastal North Carolina on Tuesday and moved out to sea after pounding the U.S. Southeast with torrential rains and winds, but flooding remained a concern in parts of Florida that received the brunt of the tropical storm. Colin was downgraded to a post-tropical cyclone southwest of coastal North Carolina. As it moved off to sea in the afternoon, it packed winds up to 60 miles per hour, National Hurricane Center in Miami said. The storm was downgraded just hours after making landfall on Florida's northern Gulf Coast early Tuesday. It then swept across Georgia on its path to the Atlantic, affecting coastal South and North Carolina.

ZOO REOPENS WITH REMODELED ENCLOSURE

Visitors flocked on Tuesday to the Cincinnati Zoo the day after prosecutors declined to charge the mother of a 3-year-old boy who fell into a gorilla enclosure, causing zookeepers to kill the endangered animal to protect the child. Hundreds of people got their first look at the remodeled enclosure, which the zoo changed to prevent a repeat of the May 28 incident that led to the shooting of the 17-year-old endangered western lowland silverback gorilla Harambe to prevent harm to the child. Emily Butler, 40, from Florence, Kentucky, who was visiting with her 8- and 11-year-old sons and other family, called Harambe's death "sad all the way around," but said they were excited to be at the habitat's reopening. "I was concerned they might close the exhibit altogether," she said. "This is the one place in Cincinnati we've always come to spend time with our kids." Reuroes

US WARNS BANKS ON THREAT AFTER HEIST

U.S. regulators on Tuesday told banks to review cybersecurity protections against fraudulent money transfers in the wake of revelations that a hacking group used such messages to steal $81 million from the Bangladesh central bank. The notice from the Fed and other financial regulators came two weeks after the U.S. Federal Bureau of Investigation privately urged banks to look for signs of possible cyberattacks. That report asked them to hunt for technical clues that they have been targeted by the same group, according to a notification seen on Tuesday by Reuters. The warnings suggest that U.S. government and law enforcement agencies are concerned that recent attacks on banks in emerging-market economies could lead to losses for big U.S. firms that rely on the so-called SWIFT fund-transfer network.

Clinton wins NJ as she gathers enough delegates to clinch party's nomination

Nearly 700 delegates were up for grabs Tuesday night in six states.

Hillary Clinton made history Tuesday with a victory in New Jersey's Democratic primary, securing enough pledged delegates and superdelegates to become the first woman to win a major party's presidential nomination.

The win comes a day after The Associated Press declared her the presumptive Democratic nominee, after reporters canvassed superdelundeclared egates and found enough publicly voiced their support for Clinton ahead of Tuesday's vote to put her over the "magic number" of 2,383 delegates. Nearly 700 delegates were at stake in six Democratic primaries Tuesday, with the biggest prize being California's 475.

Polls in California closed at 8 p.m. local time, and results were not available at press. However, that state could hold the key to whether Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders continues to contest the Democratic nomination. Polls showed the race between Sanders and Clinton was a dead heat, and a Sanders' victory could help make his case that declared superdelegates be free to vote for either candidate at July's national convention in Philadelphia.

In New Jersey's primary, Clinton had 59.3 percent of the vote with 8 percent reporting to Sanders' 40.7 percent.

"We are at the brink of a historic moment, but we still have to work to do," Clinton wrote in a tweet. "To everyone who's worked so hard, thank you. Let's go win this thing."

Despite the daunting delegate numbers, Sanders refused to concede the nomination to his rival.

"Our goal is to get as many delegates as we possibly can and to make the case to superdelegates that I believe the evidence is fairly strong that I am the strongest candidate," Sanders said during a press conference Monday.

While the campaign has said it will continue to try and sway superdelegates to support Sanders, none have yet decided to do so, Sanders' campaign manager Jeff Weaver acknowledged on MSNBC Tuesday afternoon.

Barring a seemingly improbable large-scale switch among the party's superdelegates. Clinton would seem to have the nomination on lockdown— a development that allows her to pivot her messaging and campaign to target the presumptive Republican nominee. Donald Trump.

Trump — under fire from Democrats, Hispanics and his own party this week for comments he made questioning the impartiality of a federal judge presiding over two fraud class-action lawsuits involving his defunct Trump University because of his Mexican heritage — held a news conference earlier Tuesday at which he claimed his comments had been "misconstrued."

Trump again blamed the media, claiming inaccuracies had been reported, but continued to accuse Judge Gonzalo Curiel of treating him unfairly.

The last primary before the conventions will be a Democratic primary in Washington, D.C. on June 14. METRO

How can Hub handle worsening traffic?

Storrow traffic is bumper-to-bumper, DEREK KOLYOUMHAN

At least 80,000 more vehicles expected on city streets.

A report from A Better City, conducted with researchers at Northeastern's Dukakis Center for Urban and Regional Policy, finds that Boston's ongoing population growth will bring an unprecedented traffic crunch to drivers and MBTA riders over the next 15 years.

Already widely considered one of the worst U.S. cities for traffic, Boston will add at least 80,000 automobiles on more roads and highways, a near 5 percent increase.

The report also projects by 2030 there will be 14,000 additional subway commuters, more than 11,000 new bus and trolley riders and another 1,000 on the commuter rail. Air travelers aren't exempt from the bad news, as Logan Airport may have to handle 63 percent more passengers annually.

So what can be done to address the traffic woes of the future? According to two of Greater Boston's top thinkers on urban planning, the city needs to optimize its land near public transportation and invest in public transit.

If new arrivals to the city could live steps from a T stop it would keep more drivers off the road, accord-COMMUTERS ALSO ing to Dennis EXPECTED Pieprz, urban planner with the Watertown firm Sakasi Associates and a professor at the Harvard Graduate School of Design.

Pieprz also pointed to the need for mixed-use developments that offer a blend of housing, retail and office space, as they'd reduce the need for people to drive.

Currently, more than two-thirds of the labor force gets to and from work by car, truck, motorcycle or taxi.

Another wild card that could upend the way traffic moves in the city: the driverless car.

Pieprz has high hopes for the technology and said it could remove some of the inefficiencies that sloppy driving and car accidents bring to the road, while also reducing the need for people to have parking spaces nearby their homes and places of work.

"Driverless cars can be more compact, they can flow better, they're not going to stop to gawk at traf-fic incidents," he said.

Ride-sharing, reduces the need for personal cars, he said.

"People will buy less cars and use existing ones more efficiently," he said, in a city where ride-sharing is encouraged.

But overall, Pieprz said, increasing the number of choices commuters have is what Boston's transit future will be all about.

"The only way you can get more capacity. or more choice through transit options, is through improved bike and pedestrian improvements and shifting away from the single-driver car - big. oversize cars stuck in traffic," he said.

For Alex Krieger, a planner with the firm NBBJ who also teaches at Harvard, everything boils down to investing in public transit — and not just in maintenance, but aggressive expansion.

One major part of that, he said, should be restarting the conversation about an "urban ring" of > public transit around city.

The problem with the region's train system particular, he said, is that it focuses too much on getting people in and out of the downtown area and too little on getting commuters around at the edges of areas serviceable by train.

"Not all the jobs are at the center, and not everyone is commuting downtown," Krieger said.

When the commute between two areas - say, between Brookline and Cambridge — is too unnecessarily long, he said, many opt to drive.

The ideal MBTA of the future, then, will look more like a "spider web" than a collection of straight shots toward Downtown Crossing, That could mean the unlikely option of new subway lines, or it could mean new bus routes, he said.

Krieger, unlike Pieprz, does not have a rosy view of ride-sharing's impact on traffic.

Uber and Lyft — as well as whatever happens when driverless cars become more available may end up causing more traffic woes, Krieger said.

"As long as there's a greater ability for perpetual, cheap personal mobil-ity, there will be congestion in cities," he said.

All the more reason to invest more heavily in public transportation, he said, because the competition for commuters will only get steeper as technology improves.

Volunteers wanted for Fenway Park 'terrorist attack'

Avoid the park on Sunday, officials said, as police and federal officials will be practicing a simulation.

Authorities are looking for Red Sox fans willing to volunteer some time on Sunday to be part of a simulated "largescale terrorist attack" at Fenway Park.

Officials. stressed that there were no actual threats or security concerns, will be staging the terror situation on Sunday at the ballpark to help federal agents and Boston police practice.

"It's really practice for protocol: What should officers or first responders do?" BPD spokeswoman Rachel McGuire said. "It's like a dress rehearsal. We're not going to be disclosing super classified secrets."

The simulated terrorists and police would be using "inaudible, simu-

Police are now seeking 100 volunteers willing to act as fans. They will wear makeup and be asked to take part in drills throughout the morning, or to serve as "victims" to be treated by EMS.

It's the first time in its history the stadium has opened its doors to such an elaborate training exercise, Red Sox spokeswoman Zineb Curran said.

"This will also be the first time fake gunfire is fired in or around the ballpark since filming of the movie 'The Town," Curran wrote in an email.

Police said they will be reaching out to the public in the days before the simulation to make people aware of the activity they can expect to see and hear nearby on Sunday. They are also advising people to stay away from the area. Parts of Yawkey Way and Van Ness Street will be closed throughout the

DHS: Airport security better since TSA screening lapses

The Transportation Security Administration is working to improve airport screening after major lapses last year, a government investigator said Tuesday, adding that the agency has embraced oversight.

"As a result of our audit reports ... TSA is now, for the first time in memory, critically assessing its deficiencies in an honest and objective light," said John Roth, inspector general of the Department of Homeland Security, the TSA's parent agency. "We are generally satisfied with the response we have seen at TSA."

"We went from a cultural situation where we were fought at every turn to one in which they now embrace oversight in a way that I think is ... positive," he added, in testimony before a Senate committee.

In a covert audit, department staff succeeded in bringing banned items through airport checkpoints and raised concerns about the TSA's vetting of its workforce.

The TSA has cut back on directing travelers into faster lanes that let them keep shoes on and laptops packed. That change along with low staffing levels and more fliers had sparked long lines this spring.

Roth, in testimony before the Senate Committee on Homeland Security & Governmental Affairs, said the TSA has come up with nearly two dozen ways to improve procedures.

"Over the past 11 months, we have undertaken a systematic and deliberate transformation of TSA," Administrator Peter Neffenger, who took the TSA top job after the lapses, said at the hearing.

Neffenger said the TSA has retrained staff and is vetting employees daily.

Beyonce calls out designers who snubbed her

At Monday night's CFDA Awards in New York City, Fashion lcon award recipient Beyonce revealed that high-end designers weren't always so kind to her.

"Starting out in Destiny's Child, high-end labels didn't really want to dress four black, country, curvy girls, and we couldn't afford designer dresses and couture," she said in her speech. "My mother was rejected from every showroom in New York. But like my grandmother, she used her talent and her creativity to give her children their dreams."

The "Formation" singer went on to thank her mother, Tina Knowles, and the rest of her family for the roles they played in her love and appreciation of fashion. She also revealed her mom designed a myriad of her most memorable looks, including: "my wedding dress, my prom dress, my first CFDA Award dress, my first Grammy dress."

Conrad Hilton is going to jail

Conrad Hilton — little brother of Paris and Nicky and worst airplane passenger ever — was sentenced to two months in jail after admitting to using drugs while on probation.

The 22-year-old heir to the Hilton hotel fortune is serving three years' probation (and 750 hours of community service) as a result of his very public and volatile meltdown on a flight from London to L.A. in 2015.

A U.S. Attorney's Office spokesperson told People that "Hilton admitted in court to using cannabinoids and cocaine." Hilton previously failed a mandatory drug test and was sent to rehab in January, but a court denied a request for jail time. According to authorities cited by Page Six, he also "violated probation by trespassing, failing drug tests, failing to complete three treatment programs and traveling out of California without permission from his probation officer."

@JenKirkman Society would be healthy if election cycles were short like a season of The Bachelor & if it took reality show couples years to get engaged.

@joshgad Happy birthday to the world's greatest mother. I owe her everything...including a lot of cash...

@chrissyteigen Plane chronicles, part 1: who is that screaming?

@neiltyson In any election, there are only ever two kinds of voters: those who are informed and those who are not.

Andi Dorfman's 'feminist moment'

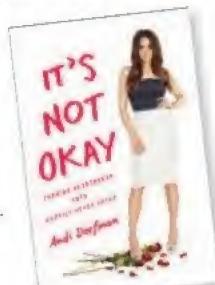

The former "Bachelorette" dishes the dirt in her new tell-all.

If going through a breakup is hard, then going through one after your proposal was televised to millions of people might seem impossible. For Andi Dorfman, this scenario wasn't just a bad nightmare — it was her reality.

The 29-year-old first made headlines after walking out on Season 18 of "The Bachelor" after a heated confrontation with Juan Pablo Galavis. She later returned to ABC and starred on Season 10 of "The Bachelorette," where she got engaged to — and subsequently broke up with — fellow Atlanta native Josh Murray.

After calling off her nine-month engagement, Dorfman decided to trade in the "tears and sesame chicken" for a new life in

New York City and a tellall, "It's Not Okay."

You don't include the names of your exes in the book, but refer to them by numbers.

Obviously, I'm not hiding their identity. I think we all know what number belongs to everyone. It just felt like a moment of empowerment to kind of put them all in the category and number them. It was like a feminist moment — this is my story. I'm writing it, I'm trying to get over a breakup, and the last thing I wanted to do is splash the names of all my exes all through the pages of my story.

What are some red flags people should look out for in a relationship?

The first one is you ask yourself, "Are you happy?" And I know you're not going to be happy every single day, but you get to choose to be in a relationship, and you should choose a relationship that adds value to your life, and your life, and makes you a better person. I think it's very easy to tell when you're not yourself. I said it in the book — I operated on two speeds during my relationship, silent or angry, and that's not who I am. It really starts with that first step: "Am I happy?"

If there are red flags in a relationship, can people move past them?

Nobody is perfect. You're not going to find that perfect person; you're not perfect either. There are going to be things that bother you, there are going to be red flags in a sense. Are they red flags that are deal breakers? There's an important difference between a red flag and a flaw.

You say in the book that there's no point to being friends with your ex. Do you still believe that?

I don't think it's true for everybody, but I'm just going to go out on a limb and say, I don't think it's healthy. Do you really want to get a Christmas card from your ex, with his new wife and their golden retriever and cute kids? Nothing good comes out of it. Go get other friends that add value to your life.

Have you gotten back into the dating scene since the book came out?

I always say I'm happily single. I've dated plenty of guys in the past two years. I date in New York, which is very different, very interesting coming from the South. But I'm still happily single.

What's different about the dating scene in New York?

I think in New York, people are a lot older when they start to date. In the South, everyone kind of gets married younger and starts families younger. In NYC, everyone's older, so you know more about yourself. It's less of figuring it out and more of figuring the right person.

Who's your right person? I would love to date a guy that's just nice — the quiet, confident, guy who isn't afraid to be nice. I'm not saying he's a pushover, by any means, but somebody that makes me want to be nice to him back. I think that's so important that you forget in relationships. You're partners. You should be the nicest to your partner than anybody else in the world. It's kind of like that "y'all against the world" mentality.

Do you think you're able to reminisce about the good times and move on?

For those going through a breakup, just think of all the negative things for now. I think it helps you put everything into perspective. But in hind-sight, a year and a half or whatever later, it is nice to be able to look at it and have a feeling not of animosity or bitterness, but indifference and acceptance for a past that was happy and sad and many other things.

Birdy talks geishas and 'leaving the nest'

The musician gears up for a performance on Wednesday at Paradise Rock Club.

Birdy has accomplished more in the five years of her young career than most hope to accomplish in a lifetime. At just 14, she wowed the world with her heartfelt cover of Bon Iver's "Skinny Love." Since then, the British musician has toured the world, sold 10.5 million records worldwide and is now on her third album, "Beautiful Lies." We chatted with the now 20-year-old about being inspired by geishas, her upcoming tour and what it's like living on. her own for the first time.

Where are you calling from today?

I'm calling from London. Sunny London. It's really beautiful today, actually.

I've just come up from my family's home in the countryside, in New Forest, which is in the south of England. But I've been living on my own for the past year and a half for the first time.

What's the biggest change for you living on your own now?

Cooking for myself and taking the bins out. [Laughs] The weirdest thing is that it's so quiet. I'm used to a full house of people and it's usually loud because we're all musicians and we all make so much noise. It's weird having so much space to think.

I bet that's great to have all that space to fill songs with.

It's been amazing for writing. I have an upright piano ... it's so nice.

You mentioned cooking. Getting creative in the kitchen, too?

I can't cook anything. I'm so bad. [Laughs] I've made

"It takes time to know what you want," says Birdy, All PHOTOS OLIVIA BEE myselfill a few times because I'm such a bad cook. I try not to. Apart from pasta. But luckily that's my favorite.

So it's been three years since your last album,

"A Fire Within." What have you been up to in that time?

I've been making the new album ["Beautiful Lies"] for a year and a half and touring a lot. I came to America to support Christina Perri for two months and gosh [it was so long ago]. Two years, I think. But that was amazing. To tour on a bus with my band. It was so much fun. Making this album was a chance to get back to normality and see my family.

Let's talk about the new album. Were you inspired by anything in particular this time around? I notice some eastern influence with the artwork.

It's inspired a bit by a book called "Memoirs of a Geisha." I read it at the beginning of the process and it's about a girl who is ripped from her family in the country and is forced to become a geisha in the city and has to learn to fight for herself. The imagery in the book is so beautiful as well. I love the strength of the geisha. I'm wearing a kimono on the album cover and wear it onstage sometimes because Hove how strong it makes me feel.

What would you say is the most personal song for you on "Beautiful

One of the most personal for me is "Lost It All." I had a lot of frustration at the time I was writing it because I wasn't as confident as I wanted to be. But it takes time to know what you want and try different things. Looking back, it's a part of life and growing up.

You're about to hit the road again for your upcoming tour. What are three things you can't leave home without? I have to take my pillow from my bed. It's so comfy. It's a feather pillow. Then I have this unicorn head that I got in Nashville. It's a blowup one. I put it on the wall. It makes me laugh! |Laughs| I also like to have a keyboard so I can play through the night on my headphones in my bunk.

Birdy performs on June 8 at the Paradise Rock Club.

Rough day for Pats' No. 1 enemy, Goodell

Two stories regarding the NFL commish went viral on Tuesday.

It's only Wednesday but it's already been a rough week for NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell.

The NFL's official Twitter account was hacked on Tuesday and it said that the commish had died (he hasn't) and earlier in the day a Patriots fan posted a photo of himself posing with Goodell. In the photo the fan had his middle finger raised to an oblivious Goodell and the picture went viral.

"Sharing cigars with Roger Goodell at 30th Annual @[imKelly1212 Golf Tourney onflcommish @KFKFoundation." Smerlas tweeted with the photo.

Smerlas later tweeted to a furious Pats fan base, "Everybody take it easy, I was trying to work him over to get the games back."

In addition, Goodell's Wikipedia page was updated Tuesday morning and it listed his cause of death as "Deflated Lungs."

The NFL commissioner remains public enemy No. 1 in New England as Deflategate continues to play itself out in court. The U.S. Second Circuit Court of Appeals will soon rule on whether or not it will rehear Tom Brady's suspension case. An out-of-court settlement is highly unlikely as Goodell pointed out himself at the Kelly golf outing.

"As I said, we've had all those discussions," Goodell said. "We've had settlement discussions over the past year. At this stage, no, right now we're moving forward. The courts will make their decisions and we'll move forward
